

Sustainability in Action: Student's Virtual tribute to environment Day 2025 amidst Exams

5 June 2025

Due to ongoing final examinations, the students of St. Thomas' College of Education were instructed to celebrate World Environment Day at home on 5 June 2025. In alignment with the college's commitment to environmental awareness and sustainability, students were encouraged to mark the day through creative and meaningful activities within their own environment.

Following these instructions, students actively participated by planting saplings, creating eco-friendly posters, crafting items from waste materials and spreading awareness about environmental conservation through slogans and short videos. These activities not only reflected their enthusiasm but also showcased their talent and commitment to protecting nature.

Students shared photographs and videos of their participation in the college WhatsApp group. The submissions showcased a range of thoughtful initiatives including water conservation messages, home composting, plastic reduction practices, and cleanliness drives.

The celebration proved that even from home, students can make a meaningful impact and contribute to environmental preservation. Faculty members commended the students' efforts and creativity, praising their dedication to making a difference despite the academic pressures of the examination period.

This home-based celebration of Environment Day proved as an inspiring initiative, reinforcing the importance of individual responsibility in safeguarding our planet.
